

By mandating copy protection in hardware devices, the government is only further putting down any rights to fair use. The "fair use" laws exist for a reason, a very important reason, to keep large corporations from dictating not only what to market, how much it costs and when we receive it, but also how we should be allowed to enjoy it. No one should be able to tell me I may enjoy a movie, or record their way and not my way. No corporation should dictate an American citizen's rights.
